 Lane Somers Not "just a piece of our history" this was a monument honoring the dead alumni of THIS VERY SAME UNIVERSITY. Four of University Founder William Richardson Davie's grandsons fought for the Confederacy, one was killed at Gettysburg. Here is his bio - <https://www.findagrave.com/.../william-davie-desaussure>

Subject: Request for Assistance

Chief,

Below is draft language for the request for NC SHP assistance:

The UNC Police Dept. is currently planning for an event on Thursday August 30, 2018 from 8:00-9:30 on our campus in McCorkle Place. The event is titled "Silent Sam Twilight Service" and is being promoted by Alamance County Taking Back Alamance County (ACTBAC).

On Monday August 20, 2018 a large group of approximately 350 people pulled down the Silent Sam statue on UNC's campus in a well-organized operation that resulted in two police officers being assaulted and law enforcement being overwhelmed by the number and organization of the crowd. This was a very violent and aggressive crowd unlike crowds previously encountered at Silent Sam demonstrations.

On Saturday August 25, 2018, several supporters of the Silent Sam monument came to McCorkle Place with Confederate flags to demonstrate their support for the Confederate monument. Opposing these pro-Confederate demonstrators was a small group of protestors who attempted to block the movement of the pro-Confederate demonstrators as well as obstruct the view of the Confederate flags. This led to a series of altercations between the two sides eventually resulting in the arrests of 7 individuals. Six anti-Confederate arrestees were charged with offenses such as Simple Assault, Public Disturbance, Injury to Property (Confederate flags), and Inciting a Riot. One individual wearing an ACTBAC T-shirt was arrested on a Simple Affray charge after punching a counter-demonstrator in the face.

During the August 25 event, UNC Police utilized the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Police Department's Civil Disturbance Unit for command post security and crowd control. At one point, the CDU had to deploy one squad to control a crowd rushing officers who had arrested one of the counter-demonstrators. The CDU was exceptionally effective in helping UNC Police Officers to facilitate safe arrestee transportation and to control an aggressive crowd.

Due to the recent escalation of violence at these events, the UNC Police Department hereby requests the assistance of the NC State Highway Patrol Mobile Field Force for the evening of August 30, 2018. We anticipate that the public assault on a counter-protestor by the individual wearing an ACTBAC T-shirt will lead to additional confrontations against ACTBAC at this event on August 30, and that UNC Police will need Mobile Field Force assets on site.

During this deployment, Mobile Field Force will be staged in Hill Hall on UNC's campus located at 145 East Cameron Avenue. The Mobile Field Force will need to be on site no later than 6:30pm.

For the purposes of logistics, please contact Sgt. Jake Kornegay at 919-306-1985.

Thank you

Dear Colonel McNeill –

Please accept this letter as a formal request for the assistance of the North Carolina State Highway Patrol's Mobile Field Force to assist, as needed, with crowd control during a rally/counter protest event on Thursday, August 25, 2018. The event is scheduled to be held on the UNC Chapel Hill campus on McCorkle Place where the Civil War memorial statue (Silent Sam) once stood. The event is titled "Silent Sam Twilight Service" and is being promoted by Alamance County Taking Back Alamance County (ACTBAC) to take place at 8:00pm. Although activity will be centered on the UNC campus there is a real potential that it will overflow into the Town of Chapel Hill, specifically onto Franklin Street.

On Monday August 20, 2018 a large group of approximately 350 people pulled down the Silent Sam statue on UNC's campus in a well-organized operation that resulted in two police officers being assaulted and law enforcement being overwhelmed by the number and organization of the crowd. At one point, the CDU had to deploy one squad to control a crowd rushing officers who had arrested one of the counter-demonstrators. The CDU was exceptionally effective in helping UNC Police Officers to facilitate safe arrestee transportation and to control an aggressive crowd.

This request for assistance is due to the escalation of violence at these events. We anticipate that the public assault on a counter-protestor by the individual wearing an ACTBAC T-shirt will lead to additional confrontations against ACTBAC at this Thursday's event, creating the need to have NCSHP Mobile Field Force assets on site. The Mobile Field force would be deployed if it became necessary to move a large number of people or to clear an area due to riot conditions.

If you are able to assist, the Mobile Field Force will need to report to Hill Hall on UNC's campus located at 145 East Cameron Avenue by no later than 6:30pm, where they will be briefed, fed, and staged. Arrangement will be made for Troopers that need over-night accommodations.

If you have any questions please give me a call. Otherwise, please have your designated staff person coordinate with Sgt. Jake Kornegay at (919) 306-1985, jdkorneg@psafety.unc.edu.

ACTBAC fully supports Barry Brown's sucker punch of a citizen on Saturday and has advised its membership that punches like Brown's are appropriate immediate reactions to someone touching your possessions.

They are coming to Silent Sam Thursday night.

There has not been a single comment out of hundreds on their Facebook Barry Brown posting criticizing Brown's actions. Many call for more violence -- both that Brown's Saturday incident should have concluded with the victim suffering greater injury, and that there should be a greater magnitude and variety of violence, including gun violence, in future incidents.

This is from the most recent post: "WE DO NOT PROMOTE VIOLENCE. But at any of our events that someone puts you in a situation to where you or your property is threatened, then you have a legal right to protect you and yours. And we will back you as long as the threat is real. In his case, the threat was real and justified."

Are you going to allow this group on campus on Thursday?

Chapel Hill police told 'Do not engage' with Silent Sam protesters before statue fell

By Tammy Grubb And Mark Schultz

CHAPEL HILL

Emails and text messages released Wednesday show Chapel Hill police were told to stand back from the Silent Sam Confederate statue before demonstrators toppled it Aug. 20.

In response to a public records request, the town provided hundreds of pages of communication related to the protest. Most came from people in and outside the town who criticized the police for not intervening.

Several emails show the town was preparing for “a peaceful rally” at Peace and Justice Plaza on East Franklin Street, not the frenzied scene that occurred later that night across the street on McCorkle Place on the UNC-Chapel Hill campus.

But the communication released Wednesday, first reported by WRAL, also contained phone texts that show Chapel Hill Police Chief Chris Blue telling officers not to confront the protesters.

“Let’s give them lots of space,” Blue said in a text.

In another, Blue is told that some Chapel Hill officers are staying with UNC Police on campus.

“Yes, but do not engage w/ Crowd,” Blue said in response. “Stay way out.”

A final text notes that UNC officers are moving away from the statue.

The next day Blue sent an email to “All Police” thanking them for their “good work during a challenging time.” The department called back over 50 officers for the protest, and public works, fire and the town’s emergency management coordinator were all on duty “to support and assist UNC as needed.”

“While some of today’s comments have been critical, you should know that I have received many comments from appreciative community members who recognize your considerable patience during a time when law enforcement is being uniquely tested,” Blue wrote.

“And I’m understandably proud of our agency’s history of protecting people,” he added, with the last two words in bold. “All who were working last night most certainly did that well.”

The town and university are preparing for another raucous night at McCorkle Place on Thursday when Silent Sam protesters plan a dance party and an opposing group, ACTBAC (Alamance County Taking Back Alamance County), plans a twilight vigil for the toppled Confederate statue.

The university is asking people to stay away from McCorkle Place. Starting at 5 p.m. Thursday, the town will restrict parking and loading zone access on Henderson Street, and the 100 and 200 blocks of East Franklin Street.

Mutual aid agreement

The Chapel Hill Police and UNC Police departments have been criticized since the statue was felled for not stopping the protesters who pulled it down. Blue, in particular, has been the target of an online meme calling him a communist and questioning his duty to uphold the law.

Blue did not respond Wednesday to a request for an interview.

However, UNC Police typically take the lead in on-campus operations, with Chapel Hill police and others serving as backup and leading the response when campus protests move to Franklin Street.

Chapel Hill and UNC police have a mutual aid agreement for emergency situations and special events, such as NCAA and Halloween celebrations. Otherwise, UNC Public Safety patrols university-owned or leased land, and Chapel Hill police patrol the town.

Protesters topple Silent Sam Confederate statue at UNC

A crowd of protesters pull down the Confederate statue known as Silent Sam on the campus of the University of North Carolina Monday night, Aug. 20, 2018.

By Julia Wall

For example, Chapel Hill officers helped with the August 2017 rally that brought hundreds of people to the campus, Blue has said, but only by directing traffic and protesters off campus and on Franklin Street.

Standard practice

UNC has declined to provide emails and texts from Chancellor Carol Folt, UNC Police Chief Jeff McCracken and other university officials related to the Aug. 20 protest, citing the ongoing investigation into what happened and how it was handled.

UNC Board of Governors member Thom Goolsby has been critical of the police response on Aug. 20, saying the officers were “highly derelict” in their duty “by standing back and allowing these outside criminal elements to riot and destroy state property.”

Goolsby opposed a resolution passed by the Board of Governors on Tuesday. The resolution directs two board members and staff to hire an outside firm to review the preparations and the response to the Aug. 20 protest. A report from that assessment is due to the board by Nov. 15 — just shy of the 90-day deadline that state law sets for returning Silent Sam to his pedestal.

In a statement after the statue was toppled Aug. 20, Chapel Hill Mayor Pam Hemminger said the town’s priority was protecting public safety at Peace and Justice Plaza and on Franklin Street. The town’s role on campus was to support UNC Police, she said.

“When the crowd spilled onto Franklin Street, police officers detoured vehicular traffic,” Hemminger said. “This is our standard practice in the interest of public safety. Our focus for any large crowd event is to keep people safe.”

The town is on record opposing the monument. Hemminger noted she wrote a letter in August 2017, asking that the N.C. Historical Commission move the statue to “a safer place where the story of young Confederate veterans could be told in historical context.”

In the coming days and weeks, she said, “our Police Department and management team will work to support the University in its investigation.”

Saturday’s rally

Town Manager Roger Stancil issued a news release following Saturday's rally, noting that the town's police and other departments, including fire and emergency management teams, communications staff, public works and transit personnel "worked closely with campus, county, and state officials to prepare for possible events."

That planning relied on standard safety policies and protocols for managing large events, Stancil said. Police also took the added step of setting up bicycle barricades at Peace and Justice Plaza. The Orange County Sheriff's Office, Orange County Emergency Services, Carrboro Police and Fire Departments and N.C. Highway Patrol officers provided additional help.

Stancil noted that Chapel Hill Police were called to help UNC Police under the mutual aid agreement when the crowd rushed the campus police during an arrest, pinning them to the exterior wall of Graham Memorial Hall. Chapel Hill Police left the campus once the situation was under control, he said.

Staff writer Jane Stancill contributed to this report.

One person is posting it in several places on the ACTBAC page trying to get people to come, but there doesn't seem to be much enthusiasm.

Subject: Triad City Beat: GPD civil emergency unit makes impression at UNC-Chapel Hill

Not sure if this is Notify list worthy, but sending for awareness:

GPD civil emergency unit makes impression at UNC-Chapel Hill

<https://triad-city-beat.com/gpd-civil-emergency-unit-makes-impression-at-unc-chapel-hill/>

The Greensboro Police Department's little-known civil emergency unit made a jarring appearance at a nighttime rally on the campus of UNC-Chapel Hill on Aug. 30 that began with pro-Confederate activists gathering under heavy police protection while antiracist students held a dance party.

First revealed thanks to the reporting of former Triad City Beat associate editor Eric Ginsburg in 2015, the GPD civil emergency unit anchored the multi-agency response in the wake of widespread criticism from UNC Police for allowing the opposing groups to mix during a previous event. Officers in the GPD civil emergency unit formed a cordon with their bicycles to allow ACTBAC NC and their supporters to reach the site of the toppled Silent Sam monument on Aug. 30, and then extracted the pro-Confederate activists so they could leave while pushing back against counterprotesters.

The unit's handling of the event, including ramming bicycles into antiracist counterprotesters and deploying pepper spray, has drawn marked criticism. Capt. Jonathan Franks, the commander of the special operations division, can be heard in a video posted by the Daily Tar Heel saying, "Use your bicycle and hit them if you have to," as counterprotesters pursued the departing ACTBAC contingent.

Indeed, a freelance writer covering the protest showed me a photo of her leg that had been bruised and scraped from being rammed by a police bicycle. Whatever the police's justification for that level of force, she contends that the counterprotesters were not attempting to break through the police line, and that the police escalated the situation. For what it's worth, I also watched an officer in the unit shove his bike against my colleague, Daniel Hosterman, before ACTBAC even arrived.

Capt. Franks also pepper-sprayed counterprotesters and journalists as ACTBAC reached the parking lot at the Morehead Planetarium. Right around the same time I personally observed that the unit allowed a gap in its bicycle line, prompting one officer to frantically yell for his fellow officers to tighten up. If the aggressive use of bicycles and pepper spray was premised on the fear that a melee would ensue if the police lost control, no one tried to make a run for it during the two- or three-second period when the gap opened. Surreally, all of us — counter-protesters, journalists and cops — were coughing from pepper spray together.

The Move Silent Sam Twitter account, maintained by activists involved with the protests asked on Tuesday: "Anyone working on getting answers about Capt. Jonathan Franks' pepper spray misuse at UNC last week? And the inappropriate use of bicycles as weapons?" The tweet also asked whether a formal review was underway.

"It's still being looked into by the department," said Ronald Glenn, the public information officer for the Greensboro Police Department, while declining to elaborate.

Admittedly, subjectivity can come into play in the fraught dynamics of police involvement in conflict between ideologically opposed groups, so here's another reporter's take.

"Things didn't get really testy until police were escorting those supporters out of here and they used pepper spray on the counterprotesters — that's when things really flipped," said Briana Connor of WXII 12 News. "It's just students out here now, and again this crowd here has been pepper-sprayed twice. And they've turned on cops, chanting some ugly things toward them, and police have been aggressive, too. I've noticed two separate instances where police got a little nasty with protesters out here."

P. S. Good job hiring fascists to "protect" the campus. We all saw that three-percenter tattoo.

I am looping in Chief Jeff McCracken, since your office doesn't seem to be taking this seriously.

Chief McCracken, what response can we expect from UNC Police regarding the threats made by members of ACTBAC to "show them how violent we can be" (Joshua Pennington), "to drop them where they stand" (Justin Allman), and to "carpet the lawn with the bodies of these bastards" (Al Hartkopf).

All of these quotes and proof can be found here: <https://triad-city-beat.com/climate-violence-students-set-stage-clashes-unc>

Members of The Daily Tar Heel can also confirm the threats.

Once again, this is not "heated language." These are threats by grown men to murder students on your campus. What are you doing about it? I have a cousin who is a student there.

No. This does not address the threats. What are you doing about the very real threats being made by members of ACTBAC to "flood the lawn with bodies?"

Dear Mr. Burnett,

Thank you for your email and for forwarding along the article link. We apologize for the delayed response. We understand that people feel strongly and deeply about the Confederate Monument and its future. We regret the impersonal nature of this response, however due to the large volume of emails we have received and the complexity of this issue, we are unable to personalize each response. Please know that each email is being read.

On August 28, the UNC System Board of Governors passed a resolution directing the UNC-Chapel Hill Board of Trustees and university administration to develop and present a plan for the Confederate Monument's "disposition and preservation." In the near future, Chancellor Folt and the Board of Trustees will announce a process to create a "lawful and lasting path that protects public safety, preserves the monument and its history, and allows the University to focus on its core mission of education, research, economic stimulation and creating the next generation of leaders."

You can find the most recent statements about the Confederate Monument here. We encourage you to read these statements and to check back for the most up-to-date information.

Respectfully,

The Office of the Chancellor

Good Evening,

I wanted to bring your attention to the following article: <https://triad-city-beat.com/climate-violence-students-set-stage-clashes-unc>

Some highlights from the story:

- Joshua Pennington, a pro-monument activist from Alamance County who is linked to ACTBAC, is accused of pulling a knife and threatening to kill a graduate student during the rally that culminated in the statue coming down on Monday. The student, Tim Osborne, said Pennington held a knife up to him and said, "I could kill you right now."
- In another thread, Pennington wrote, "Verbal doesn't work with these people. They want violence and a war. I say we show them how violent we can be. We need does not talkers!"
- Saturday's rally also attracted Casey Becknell, a Civil War reenactor, James Campbell, a self-styled patriot militia activist, and Manuel Luxton, a white nationalist with violent antisemitic views. All three attended the violent Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville last year, carrying shields and sticks, while confronting antifascists alongside the white nationalist groups League of the South and Vanguard America.
- On Wednesday, an individual identified as David Gregory posted on Facebook: "UNC better handle this storm correctly or there will be dead bodies on the streets up there. This has the potential to become very bloody."
- An individual identified as Justin Allman posted on the ACTBAC Facebook page on Aug. 22: "Done talking. Done fighting. Time to drop them where they stand. Let us treat them the same way they have treated our statues. Let the streets flow with the blood of the ignorant."
- a comment attributed to Al Hartkopf, also on the ACTBAC page, that reads: "We missed our chance to stand for our state and our country and carpet the lawn with the bodies of these bastards."

As you may know, ACTBAC are planning a candlelight "vigil" Thursday evening. I am very fearful that, because of the language they have used in these posts, and because of the violence they used on counterprotestors this past Saturday, that a member of their group will either commit serious bodily harm to someone or, as they have mentioned over and over again, murder someone.

What are you doing to ensure this group can no longer come onto a college campus and threaten its students with bodily harm and murder?

Why have you condemned the actions of protestors who tore a monument to violent white supremacy down, but not the actions of the men who have threatened and committed actual violence against these people?
